While there had been libraries in Detroit since the 1800s, by 1921 it was decided that the city deserved a work of art to display its million-plus collection of books. Noted architect Cass Gilbert designed what would be called "the most beautiful building in Detroit."

Doubling in size in 1963, and filled with striking architectural details as well as great art such as Man and Transportation by Bloomfield artist John S. Coppin, The Detroit Public Library story is well worth knowing.

Join us as co-author Barbara Madgy Cohn, who initiated and still directs the popular tours of the library, shares that story.

Come early at 2:30 for the Annual Meeting of the Bloomfield Historical Society.
